We're Here and We're Off!

Once we finally received our visas we were off to the races... and we're still running! As soon they arrived in the mail I got busy looking for plane tickets. It took more than a week to book flights but once we knew when we were leaving we wrapped up things in the US, packed our bags, and hopped our flight (three flights actually) to PNG! We arrived in the capital city October 15th, took care of some things there and arrived at CLTC on the 21st. Less than two days later we were off again to take Daniel to school. Well, Stefanie liked it so much that she wanted to stay too. We were able to work that out and a week later we were back at CLTC with just one child!

We've set up what we could for now and I've just finished grading four thesis papers! Tomorrow I'm on my way back to Ok Ao (where we were before) to get our household goods. It's busy, but God has finally brought us here to be a part of His work at CLTC!

Here is our home and garden.
We start planting today!

Is This Anything Like He Felt?

We were prepared to "lose" one child. We knew leaving Daniel at school was going to be hard but we'd spent years steeling ourselves against it. But, Stefanie...? She loved the school and the community almost immediately, but it took us four days to make a decision. We didn't want to leave her too, but in the end, it was what was best... for her.

This is truly the hardest thing we've ever done. We know we'll get her back, but for now... she's gone. They're both gone. Does the loss we feel compare at all to what God felt when He gave up His Son? Probably not, but for the first time, I'm beginning to get the idea... and it hurts.

Prayer Briefs:

Time to Study

I'll have a very full load next term! My two major courses are Salvation (Soteriology) and Revelation. It's going to take a lot of work to do justice to those topics!

Back in School

Michelle has started home schooling Alicia again. Alicia loves it but it's a lot of work for Michelle!

The Real World

Most students are required to do a one-year internship in order to graduate. They go out full of dreams but often find no one to share those ideals. Pray that they will endure... and learn that real ministry takes perseverance.
